	Hypothesis	Methods and Output	Interpretation and Conclusion	Presentation
A	You provide a clear hypothesis about what you think you might find through your analysis. This can be exploratory, or specific.	The methods/calculations you use are appropriate for the particular question. You provide output that clearly illustrates some insight/conclusion about the texts.	Your interpretation of the output is clear, insightful, and advances our knowledge about the question posed at the outset. In your conclusion you present implications and further research beyond your immediate analysis, and note any limitations to the analysis.	Your notebook is well organized, clear, and easy for a reader to follow.
B	Your hypothesis is not as clear, is too broad, or is not fully informed by social science or humanities concepts.	The methods/calculations you use are appropriate for the question, but the connection is not described. Your output is not clear, and/or does not clearly support your conclusion and interpretation.	Your interpretation of the output is not as clear, or is not as insightful as it could be, and/or does not relate clearly to the question posed at the outset. The implications of your analysis and further questions lack excellent insight or are slightly unclear. You note limitations to your analysis but not fully or completely.	Your notebook is disorganized in spots, parts are not clear, or some parts are not easy to follow.
C	Your hypothesis is not clear and/or is too broad.	The methods/calculations you use are not fully appropriate for the question. Your output is too messy to understand, and/or only vaguely supports your conclusion and interpretation.	Your interpretation of the output is not clear, lacks insight, or does not relate to the question posed at the outset. You fail to note limitations to your analysis or they are incomplete.	The majority of your notebook is disorganized or difficult to follow.
D	You do not present a hypothesis or it is too broad to be helpful.	The methods/calculations you use are not appropriate for the question and you provide little or unclear output.	Your interpretation in nonexistent, completely unclear, or does not relate to the question posed at the outset. You fail to note limitations to your analysis.	Most or all of your notebook is disorganized or difficult to follow.
